CI2016 THEME
The Exponential Shift: Making Transformation Happen

Will you disrupt or be disrupted? The innovator’s clock is accelerating. Exponential technologies continue to converge, challenge and create unexpected and significant opportunities. This poses an existential challenge to many organizations, who cannot survive, let alone thrive, simply by executing more efficiently and effectively. It also places stress on individuals - who need to develop the ability to confront ambiguity and sometimes jarring shifts - and institutions designed for a linear age.

While the challenge is immense, so too is the opportunity. The waves of disruption affecting our global economy are creating massive new growth markets. Rising to the transformation challenge requires new mindsets, skills, organizational designs, and more, but leaders that do so have a chance to drive substantial growth and impact.

CI2016 will help you understand and make the most of the exponential advances in robotics, artificial intelligence, automation of jobs and vehicles, healthcare, energy, workplaces of the future and other major trends. You will join with directors, leaders and emerging talent from many of Australia’s and the world’s major organisations, State and Federal Government departments, Universities and entrepreneurs across all sectors.

Don’t miss the world class line-up of visionary innovators, futurists and leaders that are gathering at CI2016 to help us better understand and prepare for our rapidly changing world. This event will give you the knowledge and tools to develop the leadership mindset you need to transform your organisation.

With Martin Ford [USA], Professor Hiroshi Ishiguro [Japan], Ramez Naam [USA], Dr Daniel Kraft [USA], Dr Abigail Allwood [USA], Scott Anthony [Singapore], Professor Tanya Monro

The positive potential of exponential change amazes us. Imagine autonomous vehicles making life more efficient, or precision medicine dramatically increasing life expectancy. Exponential change, however, places clear stress on society and raises numerous questions. How, for example, will we deal with the ethical implications of genetic manipulation? How will we re-train and re-trench the millions of workers that will be automated out of jobs? What is the right taxation and redistribution framework to encourage innovation and growth while avoiding the creation of a permanent underclass?

AFTERNOON

Master Classes
Early Afternoon Sessions
(2:15 – 4:45pm)
includes afternoon tea 4:15pm – 4:45pm

Renee Leon PSM, Secretary of the Department of Employment
"Everyone thinks of changing the world, but no one thinks of changing himself." Leo Tolstoy

If what we have today is a function of what we do or have done, and what we do is a function of how we think, what thinking or mindset shift will be need to transform our business, government, health and education institutions and the way they work?

In this session, leaders from a variety of backgrounds will discuss the new ways of thinking and mindsets needed if we are to transform our institutions, economy and society to be one that best positions us for continued prosperity in changing and uncertain times.

Speakers will describe successes and failures in confronting change and the need for transformation. They will contrast the leadership attributes and mindsets that distinguish between the two.

Beyond the mindsets the session will also touch on the "must-do’s" and strategies that need to be employed if transformation is to occur.

+ speakers to be confirmed

 Provocateur: Bill Ferris AC, Chair of Innovation & Science Australia

WEDNESDAY 9 NOVEMBER
CONFERENCE DAY THREE

MORNING

Exponential Conversation Plenary 4 - Energising our Intellectual Capacity… turning our ideas into enterprise (8:45am)
Professor Michelle Simmons, Scientia Professor of Physics, UNSW; Australian Research Council Laureate Fellow
Martin Bean CBE, Vice Chancellor and President RMIT University
Dr Alan Finkel AO, Australia’s Chief Scientist
Dr Alex Zelinsky, Australia’s Chief Defence Scientist (DSTO); computer scientist, systems engineer and roboticist
Provocateur: Doron Ben-Meir, Vice-Principal Enterprise, Chancellery, University of Melbourne

The Australian Government invests $9.7Bn every year in an effort to facilitate and stimulate innovation. These funds provide much needed support for a number of nation building activities including (but not limited to):
• The funding of our Universities and leading research institutions
• National scientific infrastructure and platforms
• The CSIRO
• The Research & Development Tax Incentive

Despite this investment, Australia sits at the bottom of the OECD rankings with respect to the extent to which our research community collaborates with industry. It is well understood that such collaboration is vital for the successful utilisation and commercialisation of research generated intellectual property and, moreover, enriches the ideas pool within which our world class researchers operate.

So why the disconnect? What’s missing and what can/should we be doing about it? What are we doing right and what have we learned from our mistakes? What can we learn from the most successful innovation ecosystems of the world [Silicon Valley, Tel Aviv, Boston, Cambridge…]? How might we apply those lessons given the cultural, geographic and economic differences that exist?

This is an unique opportunity not only to hear from our country’s leading thinkers in this area but to engage with them in Q&A and advance our collective understanding of how Australia can transform its economy from a reliance on primary and secondary industry into a genuine innovation powerhouse.

MORNING TEA & NETWORKING (10:30am)

Plenary 5 - The Future is Stunning! (11:00am)
Dr Alan Finkel AO, Australia’s Chief Scientist
Where today’s ingenuity might take us
Professor Hiroshi Ishiguro (Japan), Director of the Intelligent Robotics Laboratory, Osaka University
